This is a must read for anyone applying to residency. I am finishing up my 3rd year and wish I had read it in 1st or 2nd year. It gives excellent strategic advice (including getting exposure EARLY) and includes a great synopsis of the NRMP match data. It covers all of the important, stress-inducing components of the residency preparation and application process. This book will help you know what questions to ask and how to best use your resources for success. Highly recommend.

Most American medical schools have great advising and truly care about how their students perform in the residency match. That being said, this book still serves as a solid tool for entering medical students wishing to get somewhat of a head start prior to matriculation. It allows you to really hone in on what you need to do and challenges you to be proactive in deciding your eventual specialty while building your CV accordingly. The most invaluable sources for residency advice are, of course, residency directors of programs you are interested in. But before you meet them, peruse this book and know what kind of questions you need to be cognizant of to make yourself stand out in the match.

I am going to be a medical student this coming year, and this book answers a lot of questions about residency and process of matching. It also gives great recommendations about the what, where, when, how to improve students' chance to match to specific specialties.

Most of the information regarding activities that you should engage in during your preclinical years was pretty straightforward and obvious. I'm not a huge fan of the book.

Well written & am using as a guide. I am sure that my efforts will be well directed toward getting into my preferred residency.

I will be starting medical school this August and I wanted to have a way to help outline my time in medical school before I start. This book gives some great tips and I will certainly be keeping it by my side throughout school!
